The month was, on the whole fairly seasonable. The rainfall was above the average in central districts, and less than usual in the extreme South-West, but elsewhere about normal. In the tropics nearly all the stations report "nil." At Perth the mean pressure and temperature were about normal, and the total rainfall since 1st January is also about the same as the average for previous years. The monthly climate maps indicate high pressure in the mid-interior to the East of all our stations; and the coldest region, both during day and night, was, as usual, between Katanning, Southern Cross, and Coolgardie. In this district frosts were frequent at night time. The mean minimum on the surface of the ground was :—

	Lowest.	Date.	Mean.
Perth Observatory ...	33.1	7	43.2
Coolgardie ...	27.0	27	36.7
Southern Cross ...	22.0	27	34.9

Karridale ...	28.0	8	40.2

Snow was also recorded on the morning of the 12th at the following places :—Mount Barker, Kojonup, Broomehill, Balbarup, Jarrah-dale, Mundaring, Heidelberg, and Gooseberry Hill.

The principal meteorological feature of the month was the severe storm of the 11th, which will long be remembered on account of the wrecks of the "Carlisle Castle" and "City of York," close to Fremantle. This storm was of the ordinary winter type, but more severe than usual. The centre passed along the Southern ocean, and the lowest recorded barometer was 29.19 at the Leeuwin at 2 p.m. on the 11th. At Perth Observatory, where the lowest reading was 29.55, the anemograph recorded 630 miles between 2 a.m. and 4 p.m., or an average of 45 miles per hour for 14 hours; 310 miles between 9 a.m. and 3 p.m., or an average of 52 for 6 hours; and 168 miles between noon and 3 p.m., or an average of 56 miles an hour for 3 hours. At Fremantle the greatest velocity shown by a portable anemometer was 71 miles per hour at 11.20 a.m. At the Leeuwin the wind travelled 949 miles during the 24 hours ending 8 a.m. (11th), and next day 1,129 miles were recorded. The gale commenced to subside on the 12th. The second portion of the month was remarkable for the immense anticyclonic system which embraced nearly the whole of Australia, broken only by a "low" off our South-West coast between the 18th and 20th, which, however, did not succeed in piercing the mound of high pressure. The highest barometer reading was 30.72, recorded at Adelaide on the 26th. Accompanying the anticyclone was an abnormal cold spell throughout the Eastern Colonies and New Zealand, which Sir Charles Todd characterises as by far the most severe ever recorded in Adelaide. In Perth, on the contrary, the weather was unusually warm, the maximum temperature at the Botanical Gardens (72.6) having been exceeded in July only twice since records commenced in 1876.
