NOTES ON THE CLIMATE FOR MARCH, 1906.

The month has been hotter and drier than usual at Perth. The excess of the mean maximum over that for previous years was 2°5, and the absolute maximum, 104.3, was the highest that has yet been recorded at the Observatory in March. The excessive heat was most noticeable in the tropics, especially inland, the mean maximum at Nullagine, 104.8, being 9°5 in excess of the average for previous years. The greatest mean maximum temperature was 107.5 at Marble Bar, and the absolute highest, 112.0, at Carnarvon, which was the highest ever recorded at that place for March.

Pressure was about normal throughout.

Rainfall was everywhere below the average for previous years.

In the tropics it has been very light for the whole season, the deficiency being specially noticeable in the N.W. division, where the drought is becoming rather serious.

The Observatory, Perth, 5th April, 1906.
