NOTES ON THE CLIMATE FOR THE MONTH OF NOVEMBER, 1906.

The weather on the whole has been of a normal character. Several "lows" have passed across from the North-West coast towards the Bight, causing slight weather disturbances, principally inland.

On the 16th the disturbance was somewhat marked in extreme Eastern settlements, the temperature reaching 100° at Laverton, with a fresh North-West gale. This "low" passed across to South Australia, and caused very heavy rain in that State. Towards the end of the month very heavy rain was recorded at Port Darwin, in South Australia, and a little later at Wyndham, where 355 points fell during the 24 hours ending 8 a.m. on the 30th. This was connected with a "low" which travelled down the Indian Ocean, keeping roughly parallel to the coast, all the way from Wyndham (and probably even from Port Darwin) round to the Leeuwin, which it passed on 4th December, being preceded by considerable heat (100° at the Perth Observatory) and followed by a cool change, with a little coastal rain. On the whole, pressure was below the average for previous years in the Tropics, but elsewhere about normal. Temperature was mostly about normal, except on the Murchison and Coolgardie goldfields, especially the latter. At Coolgardie the mean maximum was only 79°·7, or 7°·2 below the average for previous years, and considerably lower than in any other November since records commenced, in 1897. The hottest place in State was, as usual, Marble Bar, where the mean of the daily maxima was 106°·3, and the absolute maximum for the month was 114°·0. The mean monthly temperature there was 89°·0, and even this was exceeded at Wyndham (89°·9), owing to the very hot nights which prevail there. As a contrast to these unpleasant temperatures, we notice that the mean maximum at Cape Naturaliste was only 68°·6, at Cape Leeuwin 69°·5, and at Breaksea Island, in the extreme South, 63°·2.

Owing to the disturbance at the end of the month, the rainfall was above the average in the extreme North-East. It was also moderately heavy at scattered places on the goldfields, and in the South-East, owing to occasional thunderstorms, but otherwise it was very light.

The Observatory, Perth, 11th December, 1906.

W. E. COOKE, Government Astronomer.
