Notes on the Climate for month of November, 1907.

The climate of this State South of the tropics is regular to a very great extent during the summ er months by the track which the "lows" of tropical origin take after recurving and moving in a south-easterly direction.

Should their track carry them down our West coast, then hot sultry weather is experienced throughout, though temperatures may possibly be lower over the fields than in coastal districts. On the other hand, should they strike the N.W. coast and journey thence overland through the Murchison and Coolgardie goldfields, then those districts are visited by the unpleasant weather, and it remains fairly cool in coastal districts.

This month the "lows" have followed the latter course, and high temperatures with thundery conditions have prevailed inland, while the W. and S.W. coastal districts have enjoyed fine pleasant weather on the whole.

Several times during the month squally weather was experienced in S. districts with showers throughout the S.W. and S. This was caused by the passage of a "low" along the Southern Ocean. It is rather curious to note that the inland "low" has persisted until the appearance of one of the southern "lows." It has then generally begun to move rapidly South-eastwards, joining forces with the latter at the head of the Bight, and the two combining as one have advanced upon South Australia.

In the tropics barometers were lower than usual, but South of these above normal. (A record high barometer for November was registered at the Observatory on the 3rd, 30·491.)

Temperatures were below normal throughout. At the Observatory the mean daily maximum was 1·2°, and at the Gardens 3·3° lower than the average, while the mean maximum was 1·3° and 1·8° lower respectively. The absolute maximum at the Observatory was 87·9° on the 17th, the lowest recorded in November at the Observatory since 1899, when, however, the weather was exceptionally cool, and only twice during the month did the maximum rise over 80°, the highest being 82·1°. Records at the Gardens show that a number of previous Novembers have been as cool, or cooler, than this one. The usual high temperatures have been registered in the N.W. and tropics (Marble Bar being highest with 114°). With the exception of the extreme S.W. and S. the rainfall has been less than usual south of latitude 28. North of there no rain is recorded, except in East Kimberley and East Murchison.

Government Astronomer.
