83.—SHORT TITLE.

These Regulations may be cited as the "Food and Drug Regulations, 1924."

SCHEDULE A.

Methods of Analysis to be used in Analyses of Foods, etc., under "The Health Act, 1911-19," and the Regulations thereunder.

GENERAL.

The Estimation of Moisture, unless otherwise specially described, shall be made by drying by any of the usually accepted methods employed in chemical laboratories, and by determining the consequent loss in weight.

The Determination of Ash shall be made by the incineration of a definite quantity of the substance to be tested by any of the generally accepted means of incineration, and afterwards determining by weighing the amount of incombustible matter remaining.

The Estimation of Nitrogen shall be made by the Gunning method described in "Food Inspection and Analysis" by A. E. Leach, 4th edition, 1920, page 58 et seq.

1. Flour—

3.76 grms. (limit of solubility) of finely powdered Cream of Tartar are placed in flask and 750 c.c. water added, heated to boiling and kept boiling for five minutes, made up to one litre, cooled down and made up to the mark again. Filter through dry filter and take 500 c.c. filtrate for estimation and evaporate on water bath. The dry residue while still hot is moistened with five c.c. of water, and, after cooling, 100 c.c. alcohol (95 per cent.) added and the whole thoroughly stirred. Let stand for thirty minutes and filter off alcohol through dry filter, and as soon as the alcohol is all off, the small quantity of Cream of Tartar on filter is washed back with boiling water and total volume made up to 100 c.c. with hot water and titrated with N/5 KOH (free from CO₂), using phenolphthalein as indicator. To the number of c.c. used add 0.2 c.c. in order to compensate for loss of Bitartrate dissolved in alcohol.

Note.—Run in about 10 c.c. alkali over end point and boil well, as Potassium Tartrate is easily soluble. Boil well and titrate back for excess of alkali.

19. Milk—

(a) Fat—To be estimated by one of the following methods:—Gerber method (see Allen's Commercial Organic Analysis, 4th edition, 1914, Vol. VIII., page 152. Werner-Schmidt method (see "Food Inspection and Analysis," 4th edition, 1920, page 126, by A. E. Leach), or the Roesse-Gottlieb method as follows:—

Take about 10 grams of milk in a special Gottlieb tube. Add 1-2 c.c. ammonia and 10 c.c. alcohol (95 per cent.), shake well, then half fill the top of the bulb with sulphuric ether, shake well. Add petroleum ether to mark, turning the tube end for end carefully to avoid an emulsion. Allow to stand preferably overnight. Read off on scale both boundaries of top layer containing fat. Take 20 c.c. of fat solution thus obtained for evaporation and calculate the percentage of fat after drying in the water bath for one hour at 100 deg. C.

(b) Solids not Fat—To be determined by difference between Total Solids and Fat.

(c) Total Solids—See the A.O.A.C. methods, 1920, page 225.

(d) Colouring Matters—See "Food Inspection and Analysis" by A. E. Leach, 1920, page 159.

Also see Appendix II.

Special Note.—If the milk is slightly soured, a representative sample may be obtained by whisking, but samples must be done, at least in duplicate, and not less than 20 grams must be taken for total solids. The acidity must be neutralised by N/10 baryta, using phenolphthalein as indicator, and .00675 gram must be deducted for every c.c. of N/10 baryta added.

If the milk is badly soured the maceration process must be employed as follows:—After thorough whisking, at least two lots of not less than 20 grams are weighed out into suitable dishes, preferably of platinum, with each of which is weighed a small glass rod flattened at the end. The milk is neutralised with N/10 baryta as above and evaporated, the end of the operation being conducted with constant stirring, and care being taken that the solids obtain the consistency of dry cheese. The solids are then extracted with dry ether eight successive times and with constant stirring, and the liquid decanted through tared filters into tared beakers or flasks. The filters having been washed free from fat with ether, the liquid is evaporated off and the fat weighed. The solids not fat in the dishes and filters (which ought to have the consistency of dry flour) are dried at 100deg. C. till constant and weighed, the deduction stated above being made for each c.c. of N/10 baryta added.

In the case of sour milks when the fat has become churned, or in which no homogeneous sample can be obtained by whisking, the whole sample must be analysed by the maceration process.

62. Spirits—

For accurate comparisons, all spirits should be reduced in strength to (approximately) 22 under proof before proceeding with the analysis.

Total Acidity—25 ccs. of the spirits are titrated with N/20 Baryta solution, using phenolphthalein as an indicator. (If the spirit is dark in colour it is diluted with distilled water carefully neutralised, or which has been boiled to expel CO₂ immediately before use.)

Extract—25 ccs. are evaporated to dryness and dried in the water oven till weight is constant.

Fixed Acidity—The extract as above determined is taken up with neutralised or boiled water and titrated with N/20 Baryta and phenolphthalein.

Volatile Acidity—The difference between the alkali required for the total and fixed acidity is calculated to Volatile Acidity.

Compound Ethers, Furfural, and Aldehydes—200 ccs. of the spirit are distilled as low as possible without charring, and the distillate is made up to 200 ccs. Of this, 100 ccs. are taken for Ethers, 5 ccs. for Furfural, and 5 ccs. for Aldehydes.

Compound Ethers—100 ccs. are taken, phenolphthalein added, and the free acidity exactly neutralised with N/10 soda. A further quantity of 25 ccs. N/10 soda is then added, and boiled under a reflux condenser for one hour, cooled, and the amount of soda used for saponification estimated by titration with N/10 sulphuric acid.

Furfural—5 ccs. of the above distillate are taken side by side with 5 ccs. of a standard alcoholic solution of proof strength containing .001 per cent. of Furfural. Both solutions are diluted to 19 cc. in 20 cc. cylinders with furfural free spirit of proof strength. 1 cc. of a solution of Aniline acetate (equal parts aniline, glacial acetic acid, and water) is added to each, and after standing for 15 minutes the depth of the colour of the standard and the test are compared by means of a Duboseq colorimeter.

Aldehydes—5 ccs. of the distillate are taken side by side with 5 ccs. of standard alcoholic solution of proof strength containing .01 per cent. of acetaldehyde. Both are diluted to 16 ccs. in 20-cc. cylinders with aldehydes free alcohol of proof strength, 4 ccs. of Guyon and Schiff's reagent* are added, and after standing for 15 minutes the tints are compared with a Duboseq colorimeter.

Higher Alcohols—100 ccs. of the spirit are taken, 20 ccs. of N/10 soda with a few fragments of pumice are added, and the test boiled for one hour under a reflux condenser to saponify ethers. The liquid is tested to see whether there is still an excess of alkali. If there is not, a further 20 ccs. of alkali is added and the test boiled for an additional hour. The spirit is then distilled nearly to dryness and the distillate made up to a specific gravity of 1.1 with saturated salt solution acidified with a drop or two of sulphuric acid. It is then cooled or warmed, as the case may be, to 60 deg. F., as are all reagents used in the following process, which is conducted in a room regulated to that temperature. 100 ccs. of carbon tetrachloride are added in successive quantities of 40, 30, 20, and 10 ccs., and the liquids are thoroughly shaken for one minute, allowed to separate, and the bottom layer drawn off after each addition. The total carbon tetrachloride extract is then shaken, first with 50 ccs. of acidified saturated salt solution for one minute and separated, then with 50 ccs. of saturated sodium sulphate solution for one minute, after which it is treated with an oxidising mixture of (1.5 ccs. of concentrated H₂SO₄ made up to 30 ccs. with water containing 5 grms. of K₂Cr₂O₇) in a ground glass-stoppered 8oz. bottle held in a specially adapted pressure frame, and agitated for at least three hours in the interior of a hot water bath so constructed that the bottle and its contents are kept as nearly as possible at the temperature of boiling water.

The bottle is then cooled, the mixture transferred to a 12oz. distilling flask (the bottle washed out into the flask with 30 ccs. of water) and distilled till all but 20 ccs. have passed over, 60 ccs. more water are then added to the distilling flask and the liquid distilled till residue in flask commences to froth. The distillate is titrated with N/20 Baryta and calculated to amylie alcohol.

63. Drugs.
