EQUAL OPPORTUNITY TRIBUNAL

BEFORE: Mr H. Wallwork Q.C. (President), Mrs B. Buick (Member), Ms P. Harris (Member).

Application for Exemption Order by Hon Minister for Education

Judgement of Mrs B. Buick and Ms P. Harris

Mrs Buick and Ms Harris agree with the President's judgement. The grounds on which we support a five-year exemption are—

- (i) Evidence has showed that it is to the benefit of both girls and boys to have women in senior administrative positions in schools. Without such female role models, narrow views of women's position in today's society are reinforced.
- (ii) The evidence indicates that where gender-linked positions are not available in other states, the proportion of women in promotional positions has fallen despite Equal Opportunity legislation.
- (iii) The exemption is in keeping with the philosophy of the Act which aims to promote equality of opportunity in Western Australia. We recognise that the temporary measure of retaining gender-linked Deputy Principalships is a discriminatory measure, but we believe that is designed to eliminate the present consequences of past discriminatory practices, i.e.

the relative importance attached to seniority over merit in promotion;

the significance of country service for promotion and transfers to the city;

lack of permanent employment for married women until 1968, a factor which may still have a residual effect on the position of women in the Departmental hierarchy.

We note that the Commissioner supports the exemption but requested that certain conditions be imposed by the Tribunal. The crux of the Commissioner's argument is that the Department of Education is using a discriminatory measure in order to achieve equality of opportunity when there are non-discriminatory means at its disposal.

The conditions which the Commissioner seeks are that the Department of Education should report annually to the Tribunal on the proportion of male/female applicants and appointees for non-gender-linked positions, and the measures taken during each year to remove sex discriminatory barriers to promotion.

We have given serious consideration to the Commissioner's request, but on balance have decided against the Tribunal imposing conditions. The grounds for this are that the Act (sections 145 and 146) requires each authority to prepare a management plan and to report to the Director of Equal Opportunity in Public Employment. We assume that such a management plan will incorporate action on the matters indicated by the Commissioner. We note that the Department of Education has undertaken to submit its management plan before July 1988.

Finally, we realise that the exemption will expire in 1992, by which time the new promotional procedures should be in place. We believe, however, that the length of time needed to eradicate the imbalances caused by past practices is dependent on the actions taken by the Department of Education. The retention of gender-linked positions is a temporary measure, and neither it nor the new promotional measures per se may be sufficient to ensure equality of opportunity, as recommended by the Beazley Report, within the next five years. A vigorous management plan is required to achieve this end.

Dated the 2nd day of July 1987.

Judgement

This is an Application for an exemption from the provisions of the Equal Opportunity Act of 1984. The power to grant such an exemption is contained in section 135 of the Act.

The original Application was for exemption from the provisions of section 8 of the Act but it was later thought that section 11 was the more appropriate section as it was thought to more precisely reflect the nature of the Application in that it referred to employment rather than generally to discrimination on the grounds of sex. An Application was made and granted to amend the Application.

In support of the amended Application an amended Affidavit by the Honourable Mr Robert John Pearce, the Minister for Education, was tendered (Exhibit A). In paragraph 3 of that Affidavit the Minister said that pursuant to the Regulations certain classes of school were designated two Deputy Principalships. These Deputy Principal positions were gender-linked, one Deputy Principal of each sex being required. The Affidavit referred to Regulation 167 dealing with the classification of Primary Schools and the positions of Deputy Principal; also Regulation 184 dealing with the positions of Deputy Principals in Secondary Schools.

In paragraph 7 of his Affidavit the Minister deposed that he was of the opinion that the retention of gender-linked Deputy Principal positions is essential to the continuation in appropriate numbers, of women within the Education Department promotional system in this State. He said that he was of the opinion that without gender-linked Deputy Principal positions the numbers of women in positions of authority within schools in Western Australia will decline and children will not be provided with positive role models for women with authority.

Exhibited to the Minister's Affidavit was a report prepared by members of the Equal Opportunity Branch of the Education Department. The Minister deposed that this was the basis for his views. He said that he believed that Regulations 167 and 184 of the Education Act Regulations 1960 should be exempt from the provisions of section 11 of the Equal Opportunity Act and that the current gender specific requirements be allowed to remain for the purpose of appointing Deputy Principals to schools covered by those Regulations.

It appears from the Report referred to by the Minister (Exhibit B) that the Education Department employs approximately 13 250 full-time teachers, of whom 5 500 men and 6 200 women are employed in Primary and Secondary Schools. Despite these numbers men out-number women by more than 3 to 1 as far as promotional positions are concerned. It is said that this imbalance would be far greater if the Department did not have gender-linked Deputy Principal positions in all Primary Schools with enrolments of 300 or over and in all Secondary Schools.

In July 1985 there were 469 Principal positions held by men in Primary Schools and 35 by women. At the Deputy Principal level, 286 men held the positions and 243 women. In Secondary Schools men out-numbered women by 133 to 10 in Principal positions. However, there were equal numbers of Deputy Principal positions held by men and women.

It is said in the Report that Western Australia is unique in the retention of gender-tagged Deputy Principal positions. In all other States the number of women in promotional positions has been declining.

It is said that taking into account the New South Wales promotion lists and the age of men and women in them, the New South Wales Anti-Discrimination Board has calculated that if the current conditions for promotion in the New South Wales teaching service remain unchanged, by 1990 there will be no female Secondary School Principals in Government Schools in New South Wales. It said in the Report that married women particularly tend not to have "geographic mobility". This restricts their placement on permanent staff. It is also said that if they have had children they tend to have had a break in service with resultant loss of seniority.

Female teachers, both single and married, are also disadvantaged in relation to country service. A significant number do not avail themselves of opportunities for country service because of persistent social attitudes and housing difficulties.

In the Report it is stated that if students in the schools do not see women in decision-making roles in roughly equal numbers with men, they will not perceive women as having an input into decision-making when they leave school. Thus in the situation where there is almost invariably a male administrator giving orders to a largely female workforce they will develop certain perceptions with respect to the authority of males over females. It is said that this imbalance of power in the schools imposes an unreal expectation in both the boys and girls as to what their future roles will be. It is said that the presence of a successful female role model exhibiting leadership qualities has a positive effect on girls' attitudes towards females in non-traditional careers and decision-making positions and on boys' acceptance of female competence.

It is said that women have shown that they have the ability to perform tasks requiring leadership dominance and assertion and it is crucial for schools to present a picture of women as widely competent human beings. It is said that this will enhance the acceptance by boys of females in non-traditional roles and it will also have a positive effect on girls' self concepts and levels of self esteem. If educational leadership is continually drawn from only the male teachers, as is occurring in other Australian States, what ensues is a waste of potential leadership talent.

The Report concludes that the Education Department is committed to achieving equality in education for boys and girls and equality in employment for men and women. The Education Department is of the view that in the long term this means having a significant number of women as Principals of Schools. As it is believed that this goal will be achieved only in the long term, it is important that for the medium term there is at least one woman in the administrative triumvirate of Secondary Schools and larger Primary Schools. Hence it is necessary to retain gender-linked Deputy Principal's positions for the present.

In a report prepared for the Tribunal (Exhibit G), by Dr Warren Loudon who is the Director General of Education in Western Australia, and who chairs the Equal Opportunity Policy Committee and the Department's Promotions Working Party, set up to implement the recommendations made by the Committee of Inquiry into Education in Western Australia (Beazley Committee), it is stated that the Department is moving to a system of promotion by merit. Dr Loudon says that all Primary Schools with an enrolment of over 300 students have an entitlement to two Deputy Principals. In all cases except Junior Primary Schools these have been sex-linked. This has meant that there are in excess of 238 promotional positions which have been reserved for women. There has been no difficulty in filling these positions. In the Primary Schools apart from the sex-linked Deputy Principal positions there were only 38 women in promotional positions compared with 493 men.

Dr Loudon says that under the new promotion by merit procedures no direct benefit is given to seniority, total experience, length of time at previous promotional level or additional qualifications. All of these criteria, with the exception of length of time at the promotional level, tend to discriminate against women. The new process attempts to determine merit in the performance of duties and is thus gender-free.

With respect to promotion in Secondary Schools, Dr Loudon says that in the present situation women who are geographically mobile, typically, can obtain Deputy Principal positions in District High Schools more quickly than their male counterparts. Again typically, they need to serve a lesser period of time in positions at this level before gaining a position as a Deputy Principal (female) at a High School. The possibility of women gaining Deputy Principal High School positions earlier than their male counterparts and thus becoming Principals at an earlier age was recognised. As a result a provision was introduced which prevented women from becoming Principals more quickly than males. This provision has now been removed.

In his Report Dr Loudon says that while promotions to the position of Principals of High Schools were made from a promotion list, women enjoyed an advantage. This advantage will no longer be as significant now that all such promotions are made on merit because it would not be unreasonable to expect that males who had served longer might be expected to enjoy an advantage. The present position, however, which at least allows women to seek promotion to Principal at an earlier age, gives some advantage. Removal of the present sex-linked position would destroy this advantage.

Dr Loudon says that despite the advantages that geographically mobile women enjoy in promotion, they are still substantially under-represented. Removal of the sex-linked positions at the Deputy level would exacerbate this situation.

Dr Loudon says that it is the Department's unshakable belief that it is essential that women should be better represented in the most senior ranks of school personnel. He contends that the imbalance at the present arises from deep seated social conventions which will not be changed within the next five years. The rectification of the situation can only come about through a long term programme which emphasises the equality of women and is symbolised through the presence of women in the senior decision making councils of schools which are the most influential agent in the socialisation process which is so essential.

It is Dr Loudon's view that the rejection of this Application would decimate the number of women in promotional positions in schools in this State and would thus be inconsistent with the intentions of the Act which are to improve the lot of women and other groups who suffer discrimination.

Dr Loudon is very highly qualified and has been with the Department for 38 years. It is my assessment that he knows the real situation within the Department. He has served as a teacher and in country areas and has occupied many positions in the promotional ladder including Superintendent of Research.

Dr Loudon says that another way of looking at the matter is that, although the figures vary slightly because some are taken from July 1986 material, others the March 1987, and other material is taken directly from the personnel management system, the figures are of the order of 12 males to each one female in promotional positions other than the sex-linked Deputy Principal positions.

Mr D. G. Powell also gave evidence to the Tribunal. He has for the past four years been the Teachers' Union and Elected Member on the Government School Teachers' Tribunal. This year he became the Acting Manager Industrial Relations Branch for the Education Department. He has been a teacher for 25 years and 18 years of his career have been spent in the country.

Mr Powell outlined the history of the promotion systems in both the Primary and Secondary Schools. He said that at present the hierarchical promotion system in Education in Western Australia is well entrenched and accepted by the vast majority of the profession. This acceptance of hierarchical progression was supported by the 1983 Beazley Committee Report. It would appear, based on the experience in other education systems, that when Deputy Principal positions are not reserved for males and females, a preponderance of male Deputy Principals eventuates. He said that if this occurred in Western Australia, women would be further disadvantaged given the system in obtaining a Principal's position in a Senior High School. To maintain a pool equitable to men and women of suitably qualified and experienced teachers eligible to promote to a Principal's (H and SHS) position, it is imperative that sex-linked Deputy Principal positions be maintained.

Mr Powell said that the promotion by merit scheme is now fully operational at the Deputy Principal (H and SHS) level and will reach 100 per cent in 1989 when State-wide availability will not be a requirement. The promotion by merit scheme will replace the special promotion system next year for the Senior Master/Mistress status level positions, reaching 100 per cent for 1991.

Mr Powell produced a very helpful chart which showed the promotions system within the Department and the number of male and female teachers occupying the various posts.

Before questioning Mr Powell, Counsel for the Commissioner for Equal Opportunity advised the Tribunal that the Commissioner was not opposing the Application but was probably going to ask the Tribunal to consider whether or not conditions should be imposed on any exemption order granted.

The Commissioner's reason for not opposing the Application is because an exemption would be a temporary step towards a goal which the Commissioner thinks is sound for educational reasons. It is also a goal which is sound for equal opportunity reasons. It was said there is no conflict between the Department of Education's approach and the Commissioner's approach to the Application for an exemption.

Counsel for the Commissioner also tendered a chart concerning promotional opportunities, which was marked Exhibit 1.

Mr Powell said that over the years one of the reasons for women not rising to the top of the list for promotion as fast as men was because of breaks in their careers. Another would be the fact that they do not apply for promotion as often and do not receive promotion because of that.

Concerning the Secondary Schools promotional system to Senior Masters and Mistresses, Mr Powell said that in his view, the merit system, which in 1989 will cover 50 per cent of promotions, is free of any sex discrimination.

Concerning the position for 1988, Mr Powell said that the special system of promotion was used for promotion to the Senior Master/Mistress position at the rate of 40 per cent. When last year's promotions were being considered, it was the same at 40 per cent. In 1989 the merit system would be used for 50 per cent. The other method used for promotion is by recommendation by the Education Department. This is subject to appeal to the Government School Teachers' Tribunal.

Mr Powell said that this system favours people who do not break service with the Education Department. Traditionally women have broken service more frequently than men but Mr Powell said that if men break service they are equally disadvantaged.

Mr Powell said that over the last 19 years the access to permanency and maintaining permanency has been equal. In his view there would be very few women applying for promotion to the Senior Master/Mistress positions compared with the number of men.

Mr Powell was taken through the chart showing the promotion system Exhibit E1 by Counsel for the Union. It is apparent from that chart that apart from the gender linked positions in the Primary teaching area, once the position of Deputy Principal and Principal ranks is reached, females are grossly under-represented. At the pinnacle with the post of Principal 1A, there are no females and 78 males.

From the chart showing the Secondary promotion system, again it is apparent that apart from the gender-linked Deputy positions where there are equal numbers of male and females, females are grossly under-represented as Principals in High Schools. At the top there are 10 females as opposed to 76 males as Principals of High Schools or Senior High Schools. Concerning Principals of District High Schools Class 1, there are two females and 26 males. As Principals of District High Schools Class 2 there are no females and 31 males.

Mr Powell said that the main executive officers in the schools consist of the Principals and Deputy Principals. These are the people who principally carry out the administrative tasks and duties in the school. They are the people who would be seen by teachers and by students as being the senior members of staff.

Mr Powell said he believed that in New South Wales and Victoria, once the sex-linked positions had been done away with there had become a preponderance of men in the senior positions. He said that from talking to officials from New South Wales recently, where there is one Deputy, the majority of the positions go to males. He said that he understood there were very few Principal and Deputy Principal positions in New South Wales held by females.

Mr Powell said that in the position of Deputy Principal District High School, which is now gender-linked, if the gender link was removed it would be to the detriment of the whole service. He said the present position was particularly good for students and communities located in the country.

Dealing with accouchement leave, Mr Powell said at the present time a woman can take three years away from teaching without incurring a break in service. This had been the position for the last couple of years. Prior to that the leave was 12 months, and if on return the teacher could not be placed an additional six months would be allowed.

Mr Powell said that he would accept that a greater proportion of women are unable or unwilling to undergo country service than men. He said he could judge this from the number of applications. He said he would accept it was a social and economic phenomenon that women are less mobile and less able to undertake country postings than men. It was a typical promotion path that a teacher obtains promotion by going to a country position and then transferring from a country school to a city school at the same level. Persons occupying a position in a country school at a certain level have a preference in obtaining a transfer to the same level position in a city school over a teacher in a city school being promoted from a lower level. He said a transfer definitely takes precedence over promotion. A person who was not willing or not able to undertake country service could remain as a teacher in a city school for a very long period and not gain promotion to the position of Senior Master or Senior Mistress. He said it would be nigh on impossible in certain subject areas.

Mr Powell said that by 1991 every position shown on Exhibit E (by which he included E1) will be by promotion on merit. The promotion will be by merit rather than by what was called the general promotion which went through the Teachers' Tribunal. Under the merit system he said, where you apply has got nothing to do with the system of promotion. Matters concerning country-wide service requirements and seniority will cease to have relevance by 1991.

Mr Powell said that from 1978 or 1979 it had been Union policy to retain or to have in place the gender-linked positions for which exemption was being applied for. It is the policy of the Union at the moment. The question had come up at a number of Conferences and when it had, apart from on one occasion in 1977 or 1978, the Conferences had voted overwhelmingly to retain the gender-linked positions.

In answering Mr Maxwell Graham who opposed the Application, Mr Powell agreed that Exhibit 1 showed the Secondary Schools system of promotion as being that the typical male seeking promotion goes to the Deputy Principals District High School 1 post and from there to Senior Master and from there to Deputy Principal High School or Senior High School. The females can go direct from Deputy Principal District High School 1 down and across the chart to Deputy Principal High School/Senior High School and miss the Senior Mistress post.

In re-examination by Counsel for the Minister, Mr Powell said that there was no question that seniority will become less important as the situation moves to the 100 per cent merit promotion scheme.

In re-examination by Counsel for the Commissioner, Mr Powell said that under the merit system in the future if teachers did not go to the country towns they will not get back to the city. If people do not apply for country schools they will be very fortunate if they obtain a city promotion, simply because transfers take precedence over promotions, but people were not forced to apply for country schools.

In answer to Mr Tippet also opposing the Application, Mr Powell said that the Deputy Principals in the District High Schools Class 1 who are males are usually more senior and have had longer length of service than the females in those positions. Mr Powell said that it was easier for a female to become a Deputy Principal of a District High School. He thought it might be correct that there would be more females in the Senior Master/Mistress positions if they applied for the positions. For various reasons they do not do so.

In answer to Counsel for the Union, Mr Powell said it was true that a greater proportion of men advanced to the first promotional level in the Department than women.

When answering questions on these matters, Dr Loudon gave the Tribunal similar information.

In answering Mr Tippet as to why females were not selecting, or not choosing to move into the Senior Master position, Dr Loudon said that he thought there was a high degree of geographic immobility. As a result, many women and certainly those with the sort of experience needed in order to be a Senior Master or Senior Mistress, were not geographically mobile. Because almost all of the Metropolitan positions are filled by transfer, the women do not get a foot on the first step of the ladder through that direction. He said that if a woman elected to go to the country she can have the same opportunity as the male who elects to go to the country in terms of obtaining a promotional position.

Dr Loudon said that about one-third of the children in Western Australia live outside the Metropolitan area. For that reason the Department must be able to guarantee appointments of people to the Metropolitan area after they have undertaken a prescribed period of country service.

Dr Loudon referred to what he described as the "totally inequitable situation" in which women constitute more than half of the teachers and hold about 1 in 12 or 1 in 15 of promotional positions. He said that this did not seem to him in any way to reflect the comparative abilities of females vis-a-vis males. He said to a large extent it was his view that there are societal mores which make women significantly less geographically mobile. He also referred to another theory that for the most part the women primary teachers who were working part time, or who sought part-time work, were women who wished to remain in their profession but did not wish to work full-time. He said that since there could not be a part-time position at the promotional level, this would inhibit applications for promotion to some extent.

When asked questions about the management plan under the Act, Dr Loudon said that his Department was still working on the preparation of the management plan. He pointed out that the Department had "something like 42 000 heads", and to gain the data base for that on which to build the plan, was quite a major task.

Dr Loudon said he would say that the operation of the whole promotional system since 1984 had been targeted on trying to remove inequities and trying to change some of the situations which currently exist.

In answer to Counsel appearing for the Union, Dr Loudon said that over the last 10 or 12 years every effort had been made by the Department which could be made to ensure that the Deputy Principal females and the Deputy Principal males do tasks which are of equal importance and which are seen to be of equal importance. He said that from his own observations the Deputy Principals' female influence was equally important on boys in modifying their perceptions of what it is legitimate for women to do. He said it was equally as important with the boys as it was with the girls. In discussions with Chief Executive Officers in New South Wales and Victoria those Officers had pointed to the very real problems which had arisen due to the deletion of sex-linked senior executive positions in those States.

Dr Loudon said that if the gender-linked positions in Western Australia disappeared then the number of women in positions of management would be greatly diminished and that would be detrimental. He said he could not prove it but it was his very strong impression from talking to women who would be fine Principals but who chose to remain at the Deputy level that it was because it would mean the dislocation of their families or leaving their husbands and families, in order to take up country positions. It was his perception that it was more frequent for women to give up their jobs and move, on account of their spouses, than it was for men to give up their careers and move.

In answer to Mr Tippet, Dr Loudon said he thought it would be crippling bad management practice to leave half of the talents of the workforce (the female half) virtually undeveloped if the gender-linked positions were not retained. It was his experience that the only place where discrepancies in the male/female relationship exist is at the promotional level. Leaving aside those positions, he thought that half of the people in the country were females. He said that in the social climate which exists where the male is seen as the principal breadwinner, in two-career families one career ultimately appears to be given preference, although this did not happen in all cases. He said that "If we can get some women into positions of authority in schools the view that women, in fact, have got a place in management might start to come through."

He said that the Education Department, whatever its wishes might be, does not have one rule for men and one rule for women. He said his own view would be, it would be a good thing if the Department could, because in that way it would be able to utilise the quality of that very large number of women whose full talents are not being used. As it is, there is a system which requires the same thing for men and women. Women who receive promotions go to the country. Women who do not seek promotion maintain their metropolitan position if they already have country service.

Miss Anne Marie Heine, who is the General Secretary of the State School Teachers' Union of Western Australia and who, prior to becoming a full-time Union Officer, had been a Primary Teacher for 15 years, gave evidence. She first became a member of the Executive of the Union in 1979. The Executive is the body charged with the management of the Union, subject only to conference. Miss Heine became Vice President and then full-time Senior Vice President for one-and-one-half years. She has been the General Secretary for three years.

Miss Heine said that the changes to promotion within the Education Department of Western Australia had traditionally occurred as a result of consultation between the State School Teachers' Union of Western Australia and the Education Department. This procedure had operated for as long as she had been involved with the Union and was one which she would support continuing. The consultation process between the Union and the Department has always been followed by a decision of the Union Conference before changes are agreed to. The Union Conference consists of delegates democratically elected from the branches throughout the State on a proportional basis.

The debates at the Conferences over the past five or six years have acknowledged that promotion must be viewed not in the light of the industrial rights of male and female teachers but also in the light of the education impact on students. The last time that the sex-linked Deputy positions were debated at a Conference was in 1982. The position was then put and overwhelmingly carried that the Union should support the retention of the sex-linked Deputy positions in the schools which currently had them. That position remains Union policy and has not been changed since that time.

Miss Heine said it was still too early to see any result of the changes in the promotion systems which had occurred and which were occurring in terms of the implications for women. She said it is the view of the Union and of the Department, that retaining the sex-linked Deputy positions will give women a jumping-off point to apply for Principalships under the promotion by merit system. The end of the five-year period should see a marked improvement in the numbers of women represented in these positions. The Department, in her view, was following a very wise course in not rushing into writing the Management Report until the results of the survey which had been carried out have been analysed and thoroughly considered. The results of the survey and discussions of the analysis should allow the Department/Union Working Party on changes to the promotion structure to fine tune the arrangements which have been made and to adjust the system in areas where there are obvious shortfalls which are not being overcome by the promotion on merit system.

Miss Heine said the contention of the Union was that to break down and nullify the effects of the wider discrimination it is necessary to continue the gender-linked Deputy positions at least for the next five years.

Miss Heine read from a copy of a report of the State Board of Education in Victoria where the Board suggested increased numbers of women at Deputy or Vice Principal level and more opportunities for women to act at this level. She said that for anyone who might be of the view that the exemption was not necessary, she would draw attention to the figures provided by Mr Powell, and in particular pointed to the position of Deputy Principal (Primary) of District High Schools, where 56 of the 58 positions are held by men. She thought most of the promotions to Principalship from the position of Deputy Principal would be made to the country in the future.

Miss Heine said she thought that childhood role models were significant in the community's concept of the abilities of men and women. In 1982 it was overwhelmingly carried that the Union should support the retention of the sex-linked Deputy positions. In answer to a question from Mr Graham, she said she had not yet been to a Union Annual Conference where the number of women outnumbered the number of men. In answer to another question from Mr Graham, Miss Heine said that the particular question had not come from any of approximately 500 branches throughout the States since 1982. It had not been put on the agenda, so she would suggest it was not a case of slipping through or not slipping through. She thought there was little interest in the question because the Union policy was fairly widely accepted. She said that half the teachers posted to the country are female.

In answer to a question from Mr Tippet, Miss Heine said the policy which she was putting forward was in the Union's policy document which was distributed following the last Conference. It was in prior policy documents distributed after each Conference and it was quite well known to be part of the Union policy.

Mr Maxwell Graham gave evidence to the Tribunal as an individual. He said he had commenced teaching in 1969 after being a bonded student at the University of Western Australia for four years. He had taught in a city High School for five years and had then commenced on the promotional path. He had been an Acting Deputy Principal of a Class 1 District High School. He had then been made substantive in that role and had assumed the role of Acting Principal of that class of District High School. He had then moved to Senior Master Social Studies in a Senior High School in another country school and stayed there for one year. Because he had the status of Senior Master Senior High School, he had transferred to his present appointment in the city where he was a Senior Master Social Studies in Geography. He said 18 years down the track, that was the position he was at which was fairly typical of probably most men in the service.

As Mr Graham saw it, there was no need for sex- or gender-linked positions. He said that when he commenced teaching 18 years ago, he thought it was probably fair to say that the male Deputy Principal was most certainly the dominant Deputy Principal. He had those typically male roles of discipline. The female had what we would call typically female roles. He said that over the years, as Dr Loudon had indicated, these roles had changed and changed quite dramatically. The roles had moved away from the stereotyped roles. He thought it was fair to say that today in schools the jobs had become interchangeable. He thought that as long as the title Deputy Principal male and Deputy Principal female were kept the applicants would be locked into the role descriptions. He said he thought it would be a long time in the future before we could get away from that. This was one of the reasons why he thought very strongly that the gender-linked positions should, in fact, be abolished. He said that in terms of job description, it was no longer a requirement that a male or female fill a particular role. What was needed in schools were two very capable and astute educational administrators. In terms of one being a male and one being necessarily a female, he did not think there was any real requirement for that. He believed very strongly in the importance of teachers being role models. He felt very strongly that the position of Deputy Principal female represented quite an unfair advantage for women. All other positions were equally open to men and women.

Mr Graham traced the career paths within the Department of two women known to him. One of them, in the space of five years, had moved from being a classroom teacher to the position of Deputy Principal female in a Senior High School in the city. He said that to reach this position, which the woman had reached in five years, would take him at least another eight years; or in total from his starting point in the promotional ladder something in excess of 20 years. He said that because of the gender-linked position of Deputy Principal female it enabled women to leapfrog. He found this inequality hard to accept.

The second woman referred to by Mr Graham had been on his staff. In the space of three years she was senior to him. He found that hard to accept and said it obviously affected one's morale and the way in which a teacher felt about his work. With the women missing the Senior Master/Mistress positions in school, they had missed out on what he described as "the middle manager's" role.

Mr Sydney Tippet, whose position is Senior Master of a Senior High School, also gave evidence to the Tribunal. He has been a teacher for 28 years and has spent 11 years in the country. He has been a member of the Teachers' Union for 28 years. He had been a Deputy Principal of a District High School for four years and Acting Principal of the school for one year. He has been a Senior Master since 1977.

Mr Tippet raised the question of whether the word "person" in section 135 included the Minister, and whether the Minister was able to make the application. He also referred to the provisions of section 8 and section 11 concerning discrimination against persons on the ground of the person's sex, and said he could see nothing in the Act to encourage the Department to seek exemption. Mr Tippet noted that section 6 states that "This Act binds the Crown".

Mr Tippet said he felt aggrieved in the selection for the promotional positions because it was not by merit or by experience but by gender. He suggested that the fact that there was a preponderance of males in Senior positions depended really on the number of applications that were made. If women did not apply it could not be said that the males were being favoured. By promoting females more skilful persons were being overlooked for those positions. He said there were skilled males who could fill the positions which were now being filled by females who had had much less experience before being promoted. If the positions were sex-based then it meant that the merit of other staff was being overlooked. He made the point strongly that if the females were being promoted because of their gender, the question must be asked whether the Department was using the best skills available in the Department to administer the schools. He also made the point that the positions of Deputy Principals did not require a male or female in them to carry out the duties which, in fact, were swapped from year to year between the Deputy Principals concerned.

Mr Tippet said that many teachers were being aggrieved because of the rapid changes which were being made to redress the position which had been established 20 years ago. He concluded his evidence by asking the Tribunal to give the staffs of Government schools the opportunity for equality.

In his closing address, Mr Tippet said that although prior to 1968 there were different reasons for females not advancing in the Department, 20 years down the track the only condition that seems now to preclude anyone from obtaining a promotional position is the decision to apply or not to apply to go to a school or take up an appointment. With equal opportunity and the application of merit promotion, the situation would tend to resolve itself.

Mr Graham in his closing address emphasised that a woman could reach the position of Deputy Principal after about five years, whereas a man would take 20 years. This was what he saw as the great inequality. He said he could see no justification in reserving these selected positions for women and that promotion should be made on merit.

It is obvious from the evidence before the Tribunal that retaining the gender-linked positions will give some women an advantage when promotions to these positions are being considered. A question for the Tribunal is whether it is in the Community's interests that these gender-linked positions be preserved for a further five years.

The evidence before the Tribunal is overwhelmingly that both the Department and the Union members are in favour of the exemption being granted for a number of reasons. The primary reason is that it is for the good of the students in the schools, and ultimately for the citizens generally, that this exemption be granted.

It is significant, in my view, that only two persons chose to give evidence before the Tribunal opposing the Application; also that there were no written objections received in addition to the objections from these two persons.

In view of the number of teachers directly involved and the interest of the Community in the education of their children, this is remarkable.

The Tribunal has no reason to doubt the sincerity of the views or the evidence of the Officers of the Department who gave evidence for and against the granting of the exemption.

Concerning the question of whether or not the Minister is entitled to apply for the exemption in the light of the objection raised by Mr Tippet that the word "person" in section 135 of the Act possibly does not include the Minister, this is answered by section 5 of the Interpretation Act 1984. Section 5 defines "person" to include "a public body, company or association or body of persons, corporate or unincorporate". I accept Mr Le Miere's proposition that there is nothing in the Act to indicate that this definition does not apply or which would prevent the Minister making the Application.

Dealing with other submissions, the Union submitted that the objects of the Act are set out in section 3 and that section 3 (c) of the Act provides that the objects are—

"(c) to promote recognition and acceptance within the Community of the equality of men and women."

The Union submitted that the granting of the Exemption would further that object of the Act.

I accept that the preserving of the gender-based Deputy Principal positions would promote the recognition and acceptance within the Community of the equality of men and women.

It has been demonstrated conclusively by the evidence before the Tribunal that in the past women have not been promoted to Senior positions in the Department commensurate with their numbers or abilities. For example, in the Principal 1A positions for Primary Teachers, the Principal 1 positions and the Principal II positions, the ratios of men to women in these positions are respectively 78 to nil, 151 to nine and 137 to one. With respect to Principals in District High Schools Class 1 and 2 respectively, the positions are 26 to two and 31 to nil respectively. In the position of Principals of High Schools or Senior High Schools, the ratios are 76 to 10 in favour of males.

In my view the imbalance is so great that it must promote the recognition and acceptance within the Community of the equality of men and women if the exemption is granted.

It is interesting that Mr Le Miere quoted a recommendation made by the Anti-Discrimination Board of New South Wales to reintroduce gender-linked positions at the Deputy Principal level in that State due to the worsening situation of women in Senior positions in the Education Department of that State.

I regard the facts that the Union which represents the teachers directly affected by the issue has heard vigorous debates over the years on this question and that it is the Union's policy and that the Union has supported the Application, as significant considerations.

It is also a significant consideration that the Commissioner did not oppose the Application.

The Commissioner did ask for conditions to be imposed if the Tribunal granted the Exemption. The Commissioner's reason for asking for conditions was that it was suggested that the Department is not doing enough to promote equality between men and women by making this Application. Counsel suggested that if the right conditions were attached to the granting of an Exemption it would promote equality in other areas within the Department.

It was suggested that if conditions were attached to an Exemption Order the Department would feel the need to at least demonstrate that the proportions of men and women who are succeeding in promotions relate properly to the proportions of those who are applying for promotions.

Counsel for the Minister, however, responded that before conditions such as were being asked for could be attached, the discriminatory barriers to promotion which it was suggested existed, should be outlined in detail.

It is my view that the issues as argued before the Tribunal did not concern the general promotional system within the Department. They were primarily concerned with the Application for Exemption in specific areas. The evidence was largely confined to those areas. It would therefore in my view, be undesirable for the Tribunal to attempt to attach conditions to the Order it intends to make granting the Exemption which could have effect in wider areas of the Department.

The Tribunal is unanimously of the view that the Exemption applied for should be granted for a period of five years.
