SALARIES AND ALLOWANCES ACT 1975

SALARIES AND ALLOWANCES TRIBUNAL

FORMER PREMIERS, MINISTERS AND MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

*Determination Issued Pursuant to Section 6B of The Salaries And Allowances Act 1975Summary of Decisions in this Determination

- Cessation of benefits provided to former Members of Parliament elected before 1999
- Reduces entitlements provided to former Premiers
- Confirms decision that benefits will not be provided to former Members of Parliament elected after 1999

PREAMBLE

(1) This Determination ceases the provision of benefits to former Members of Parliament.

(2) Benefits for former Premiers will be significantly reduced and limited to costs arising from their capacity as a former Premier.

(3) The Tribunal's consideration of this area evolved from its review of remuneration, entitlements and allowances provided to current Members of Parliament, which was completed in 2016.

(4) The Tribunal became responsible for former Members' benefits in 1987, at which time a number of benefits were already being provided. In a series of decisions since 1996, the Tribunal has steadily reduced the benefits available to Ministers, Officeholders and Members once they left Parliament.

(5) In 1999, the Tribunal determined that future Members of Parliament would not have any post-parliamentary entitlement.

(6) However, at that time the Tribunal also considered it appropriate to recognise Members and former Members who already had met certain eligibility criteria based on length of service and offices held. While future Members received no benefits, those Members who had already qualified would continue to receive them.

(7) That decision did not arise from any legal right held by eligible former Members, but represented the view that their public service should continue to be recognised under the terms that stood when they were in Parliament. The Tribunal has reviewed the continuation of these benefits to former Members and, having regard to current standards, the Tribunal considers there is insufficient justification for those benefits to be maintained. The cessation of post-parliamentary benefits will therefore extend to all Members, including those who became eligible before 1999.

(8) While the cost of providing benefits to former Members has been relatively low, such arrangements are now out of step with community expectations.

(9) Continued provision of benefits for these former Members also reflects an outdated approach. For example, eligible former Members were entitled to rail travel, but this was introduced when Australia's rail systems were owned by the Government and, in effect, the former Member simply occupied an otherwise empty seat at minimal cost. Those eligible also were able to convert the rail benefit to a return airfare within Australia. With the Government's reduced involvement in rail over time, the nature of this benefit has significantly changed and is no longer appropriate.

(10) In assessing the equity of this decision, eligible former Members have had access to these benefits for an average of around 25 years, including almost 18 years since the decision to end post-parliamentary benefits for new Members. The Tribunal also noted that Members elected before 2001 were included in the Parliamentary Pension Scheme, which was closed to subsequently elected Members.

(11) The Tribunal has, in a separate Determination, provided scope for current Members of Parliament to travel as a means of educating and informing themselves, with the aim of enhancing their capacity to address issues affecting the state. However, there is no similar benefit that can be derived from travel entitlements provided to former Members of Parliament. The general travel provisions have been removed.

(12) While this Determination ceases the benefits provided generally to former Members, there is an exception for those who have served in the office of Premier, due to the status of the office and potential for many former Premiers to have a continued role in representing the state and working in the community.

(13) Nevertheless, some benefits provided to former Premiers are no longer appropriate.

(14) Under past arrangements, former Premiers were offered an office, staff and a government vehicle with a driver for a period of time following their departure from Parliament. They also were able to claim specified expenses, such as phone calls and travel in certain circumstances.

(15) The Tribunal notes that recent Premiers have often not claimed these benefits.

(16) This Determination significantly reduces the scale of benefits available to former Premiers, but reasonably maintains their capacity to claim costs arising directly from their former role.

(17) In future, direct support will be limited to claiming the costs of administrative assistance immediately following their Parliamentary careers, and support to attend official functions in their capacity as a former Premier.

(18) The Determination will now issue.
