DIRECTIONS FOR BOATS CROSSING THE BAR AT THE MOUTH OF SWAN RIVER.

The deepest part of the channel is close to some detached covered rocks, which lie to the north of the South Head. In steering for it, keep rather towards the South Head until you bring a black cross beacon near the sandy beach, inside the South Head, and the black-gable end of a house a little beyond it, in a line with a large heap of stones on the outline of the hills over the Town of Fremantle,—the heap of stones being distinguished from others of smaller size by having a white mark resembling a roadway leading down the hill from it. These three marks in a line will lead over sandy ground close on north side of the covered rocks off the South Head, and clear of a longer ledge which projects inward from the North Head. The depth of water between the two is 5 to 7 feet, according to the time of tide.
