20th.—“ We have again a very interesting weather report. The conditions this winter differ considerably from those to which we have been accustomed ever since the Observatory was founded, and will probably throw some light upon the very difficult question of whence our winter storms come. Endeavours have been made from time to time to trace storms from Mauritius, Natal, or the Cape to our country, but there seems to be no connection, and the theory has been gradually forming that our winter, like our summer storms, come down the Indian Ocean from tropical regions. In the summer many have been traced, for their main track lies not far from our N.W. and W. coastline, and in some cases they are more Eastward than usual, and give destructive storms on the N.W. coast and afterwards travel overland, giving rain throughout the interior. Many of them, however, seem to keep well out to sea, but, roughly, parallel to the coast, and eventually turn round the Leeuwin and run across the Bight to the South of Tasmania. After Easter, as a rule, we see nothing of this class of storm until the following Christmas. The ordinary winter storm, on the other hand, appears to approach the Leeuwin from well to the Westward, and used to be considered as coming across from the Cape. Since, however, all attempts to trace any connection between African or Mauritius weather and our own have failed, we seem to be forced to one of two conclusions—either the ordinary winter storms are born between Mauritius and Western Australia, or they come from the tropics just like the summer type, but keep much farther West in the Indian Ocean. The former hypothesis raises greater difficulties than the latter, and, therefore, the theory is gradually taking shape that there is only one class of storm which affects us the whole of the year round. It has its birth in tropical oceans, moves at first in a S.W. direction, which gradually veers S. and then S.E., and finally E.S.E. and E., forming a kind of parabolic curve. In summer its track lies close to our N.W. and W. coastal line, but in winter it is much further out to sea, and, as a rule, we perceive it only when approaching the Leeuwin. The great interest of the present winter's weather is that several of the storms appear to bear out this view, for they are distinctly of the summer type, and the first approach has been signalised by heavy rains in the N.W. districts, which have extended Southward throughout the State, preceded, and even accompanied, by pronounced E. winds, though the rain-bearing clouds are moving from the N.W. To-day's reports would seem to indicate another of this type, for heavy rain has again fallen in the N.W., and the unsettled weather is extending down and inland towards the Murchison. It is also becoming unsettled along the W. and S.W. coast, and, if the 'high' which covers our interior moves Eastward, as seems likely, we shall, probably, have unsettled weather throughout the State shortly.

31.—“ The present weather disturbance is once again a very interesting one, as it gives such decided evidence of having come down the Indian Ocean from the North or North-West.

“ Its effect was first noticeable in this State on Thursday last (28th). The weather on that day at 9 a.m. was fine throughout the State and mostly clear, but it was cloudy to overcast on the North-West coast, between Sharks Bay and Cossack, and the isobars indicated, though but feebly, the existence of a 'low' somewhere off the North-West coast. During the next 24 hours these clouds extended Southward and Eastward, and covered nearly the entire State South of the tropics, and rain had commenced to fall in the neighbourhood of Sharks Bay, whilst the presence of a 'low' off the West coast, working South, was more clearly evidenced.

“ Rain, as anticipated, followed the clouds, and before long it was raining throughout, being very heavy in the neighbourhood of Sharks Bay; the 'low' travelled slowly down the coast, and it is only now commencing to make easting along the South coast.

“ Meanwhile steady rain was general, and this morning's report shows that nearly the entire State has been favoured with a magnificent downpour, the greatest quantity recorded for the 48 hours being 488 points at Jarrahdale. It is still raining or showery in South-West districts, with rough seas, but appears to have moderated from Perth Northward.”

Taking the climate of the State as a whole, we find that the pressure was generally below normal, especially in the North-West districts. The day temperature also was below normal, but the night temperature was higher than usual, both these variations being particularly noticeable in the North-West.

The rainfall was, as usual, nil in the East Kimberley District, but throughout the North-West and interior it was remarkably heavy; in fact, the heaviest on record for July in the former district. In West and South-West coastal districts it was about normal, but would be excessive if the very heavy fall of the 31st (registered on August 1) were included.

It was not, on the whole, a frosty month, but the temperature of the surface of the ground was below 32° on several nights, the lowest reading being 20°0 at Wandering, on the 14th. The following table shows the mean and absolute minimum recorded by a minimum thermometer placed on the soil:—
